For over 30 years now, Blackwood Educational Land Institute has worked to model the indispensable role of regenerative food systems in all of our lives and to create an eco-conscious generation of Texans at its flagship 33-acre Landfarm in Hempstead, TX.

Now, with the Skyfarm at POST Houston situated atop the historic former Barbara Jordan Post Office building, and with your support of its work, Blackwood can reach more Houstonians with the important message that each and every food decision we make can help us to address the most pressing health and environmental justice issues of our time: chronic disease, climate change, and food inequity. This is the promise of a regenerative agricultural future in Houston and throughout Texas.

There is no better time nor place to learn about Blackwood and its vision for a more resilient future than the Skyfarm Harvest Feast, an unforgettable dinner crafted by four of Houston's favorite chefs right in the one-acre Skyfarm. We will be surrounded by the nutrient-dense crops which traveled just steps to make it to our plates with a breathtaking view of our iconic Downtown skyline.
